MEDIA MELTDOWN OVER BERNIE

As Bernie Sanders began to surge toward the nomination earlier this year, media commentators flipped into full freak-out mode—and I'm not primarily talking about Fox News, but rather the "liberal" network, MSNBC. Chris Matthews led the derangement parade, comparing Bernie's surge to Hitler's 1940 conquest of France. He then continued on an absurd rant about "socialists" in the Cold War, who might have executed him if they (meaning Communists) had won. Chuck Todd called Sanders' online supporters a "digital Brownshirt brigade." But the clown prize went to James Carville, who said he was "scared to death," it was the "end of days," and that Putin was celebrating Bernie's rise.

Let's get one thing straight: There is a big difference between Communism and European-style socialism, which is really a mix of capitalism with strong government regulation and programs. Medicare for All is Bernie's principal program, which is what most industrialized countries have. That would likely be his priority if he were elected, and it would take everything he had to get that passed through a Congress dominated by centrist Democrats and Republicans. His other programs—free college tuition and subsidized daycare for children—would not likely receive approval, at least not in a first term.

So the Bernie "socialist" revolution would more likely be a gradual push to the left, much needed after four decades of the plutocrats—aided by Republicans and corporate Democrats—sucking up all the wealth in this country and buying off Congress to get their pet legislation passed. But the entire Democratic Establishment thinks Bernie is too radical, and supposedly unelectable, they tell us. They claim that a conventional centrist like Joe Biden is the ticket to beat Trump.

Robert Reich, the great commentator and former Clinton Department of Labor secretary, says that ever since Trump, elections are not so much Left versus Right, but Establishment versus antiestablishment. Sure, as a "democratic socialist," Bernie would be a gamble. But no more of a gamble than nominating another conventional Wall Street-loving centrist who supported NAFTA and voted for the Iraq War.

Republicans are now dredging up the whole Ukraine-Burisma issue about Biden's son, enabling Trump to portray Biden as the ultimate corrupt Establishment insider. I'm afraid that if Joe Biden runs against Trump, we're in for a repeat of 2016.

APPLE'S NOBLE FIGHT

THE TELECOM COMPANY IS RESISTING DEMANDS TO MAKE ITS CELL PHONES ACCESSIBLE TO GOVERNMENT AGENCIES.

Let's give it up for Apple! It's not easy to commend a hugely profitable company for simply doing what's right for its customers and bottom line, but the tech giant is doing something much more praiseworthy. With CEO Tim Cook in the forefront, Apple is fighting to protect the right to privacy in the digital world. At a recent shareholders meeting, Cook once again took a strong stance against the Trump Justice Department's incessant demand that Apple design iPhones with a secret backdoor enabling law enforcement to bypass personal data encryption.

As Cook pointed out, such a backdoor could be exploited easily by anyone, no matter the claimed validity of their intentions. That certainly would include government agencies wherever iPhones are sold worldwide, a chilling prospect for the many millions of Apple's international customers.

Forcing or merely convincing U.S.-based telecom companies to do the bidding of government entities—particularly intelligence agencies—is a grave threat to cybersecurity and privacy. That was borne out in 2013, when whistleblower Edward Snowden exposed the massive communications surveillance conducted by the National Security Agency, where he worked as a contractor. Those revelations confronted Apple and other multinational firms with an inconvenient truth publicly disclosed around the world.

If a company depends, as those companies most definitely do, on international sales for the vast proportion of future profits, their prime loyalty has to be to customers in foreign lands. This is particularly so regarding the privacy of the vast amount of personally intimate and business-sensitive information entrusted to digital communications. Indeed, the most significant outrage in response to Snowden's leaks came from ostensible allies of the United States.

Most prominent among them was the European Union, which has since instituted myriad regulations to prevent Big Brother snooping by the U.S. government, which has access to American corporations' advanced technology. That is understandable. Although U.S. officials may vociferously complain about spying by China or Russia, it's widely known that their eavesdropping is far less effective than Uncle Sam's because both rely on their own countries' respective telecom companies.

The pushback by those concerned about cybersecurity risks has dramatically curtailed markets available to U.S. telecom companies. They have resisted, of course, none more doggedly than Apple. Its prime endeavor is putting an enormously invasive product into the pockets of people throughout the world. No dictatorship in human history has possessed the monitoring power of an iPhone. Carried willingly by an observed citizenry, the electronic marvel continuously gathers data on its owner's day-to-day encounters, dining experiences, conversations, reading tastes and much more.

Take China, which potentially is Apple's largest future market. Not only might Chinese customers have concerns about carrying the eyes and ears of U.S. spy agencies in their pocket; it would also provide their own government's police and intelligence agencies with backdoor access to their most intimate moments.

It is a terrible example of contempt for individual freedom for American companies to export cell phones and computers to Communist-ruled China that are not fully password-protected. This would be a total denial of our democracy's much advertised model of freedom based on protection from government snooping enshrined in the Fourth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

I am not of the habit of defending huge corporations and their highly overcompensated executives, but Apple is an exception. Under Cook's leadership it has been waging the good fight for our individual cell phone privacy for at least four years. The battle intensified when a federal judge ordered the company to unlock a password-protected iPhone—via a backdoor—to assist the FBI's investigation of a deadly terrorist attack in San Bernardino, California.

Such resistance took courage, and the fact that Tim Cook and Apple are still fighting to protect our sacred right to individual privacy is indeed exemplary. Regrettably, many other telecom companies quickly folded. It is certainly true that, as a selling point, Apple is driven in large measure by its commitment to protect iPhone users' desire for privacy. It is also refreshing when a company's pursuit of profit leads to a just social outcome as well. H

BEWARE THE RATFUCKERS

AS THE PRESIDENTIAL RACE HIT THE STARTING GATE, WERE GOP DIRTY-TRICKSTERS BEHIND THE CAUCUS-NIGHT MELTDOWN IN IOWA?

The initial nominating contest of the critical 2020 Presidential election—America's last firewall against full-on authoritarianism—began disastrously for Democrats in Iowa. The voting itself went well enough, but the reporting of publicly witnessed precinct results from some 1,700 caucus sites back to party headquarters was an unmitigated debacle.

Democrats, Republicans and election officials of all stripes should have learned one lesson long ago: Relying on untested, secretly developed, vulnerable computer technology for a mission-critical election is a horrific idea. It certainly was for Iowa Democrats in 2020. Their snazzy new smartphone app, designed for precinct chairs to quickly transmit results back to headquarters, failed and was quickly abandoned. Plan B—using a telephone hotline to send results—also melted down after the right-wing website 4chan got ahold of the number and decided to make Dems' already bad situation even worse.

It took two days before a spokesperson revealed, "On Caucus Day the Iowa Democratic Party experienced an unusually high volume of inbound phone calls to its caucus hotline, including supporters of President Trump. The unexplained, and at times hostile, calls contributed to the delay in the Iowa Democratic Party's collection of results."

At the 4chan message board, trolls had gone to work almost immediately after the caucuses wrapped. "Uh oh how unfortunate it would be for a bunch of mischief makers to start clogging the lines," an anonymous user quipped.

"Very long hold times being reported," another user wrote, along with encouragement to "clog the lines [and] make the call lads."

The result was the latest addition to the U.S. Electoral Hall of Shame. It was at least as bad as that time in 2012 when the Iowa Republican Party, two weeks after Caucus Day, was forced to admit it had named the wrong winner.

But were online Trump trolls responsible for the failure that left Democratic precinct captains unable to reach 85 data-entry volunteers for hours? Allen Raymond, who knows a thing or two about such things, believes it's more than that. He told me that it "takes a fairly sustained, collaborated, concerted effort" to tie up numerous phones for a long time. "Can that happen organically? Maybe there's enough animosity out there that there are enough people who would do that, but it seems like a lot."

Raymond spent ten years as a GOP operative—a "ratfucker" as they were known in Nixon-era parlance—disrupting Democrats' election campaigns, at least until he landed in jail for it.

In 2002 the Republican National Committee (RNC) paid Raymond, who owned a GOP phone-bank company, to head an illicit operation. The objective was to tie up the Democrats' Get Out the Vote (GOTV) phone lines in New Hampshire during a tight U.S. Senate race between Republican John Sununu and the state's then-Governor, Democrat Jeanne Shaheen.

Thousands of automated calls prevented Dems from carrying out their GOTV efforts and culminated with Sununu's narrow win. But the scheme was eventually uncovered, and four GOP operatives, including Raymond, were convicted of, or pleaded guilty to, taking part. Raymond, who copped a plea and cooperated with investigators, served three months in federal prison. The contrite former dirty-trickster later coauthored How to Rig an Election: Confessions of a Republican Operative, which detailed the infamous New Hampshire plot and others from his stint as a ratfucker.

"This phone-disruption effort occurring in the very first contest of the Presidential nominating process leading up to November's general election should be reason enough" to be concerned, Raymond told me. "If it's happening on the first one, and nothing's done, we're sending a signal that you will not be punished or prosecuted for this kind of conduct. That's why, at minimum, an aggressive investigation should occur to determine what exactly happened."

As of this writing, it remains to be seen if law enforcement will investigate the Iowa skullduggery. Raymond said that a simple check of phone records that night should determine where the calls originated.

This year's monkey-wrenching wouldn't be the first time in recent memory that an emboldened RNC carried out a similar scheme. Republicans attempted to swamp Democrats' Congressional offices with thousands of automated calls during the early stages of Donald Trump's impeachment inquiry in late 2019.

"I think the reason why we haven't seen something like this for 18 years is that the punishments that occurred around the New Hampshire event in 2002 had enough impact to see that it didn't happen," Raymond noted. "There were enough people who remembered it and said, 'No, that's bad business. Don't do that.'" But, he pointed out, "Memories are short. History has a way of repeating."

Raymond emphasized, "The bigger issue here is that every incident like that slowly chips away at the foundation that makes up our republic's institutions. As we slowly chip away, we shouldn't be surprised to see them crumble once we've demolished the foundation of the republic."

Finally Raymond warned, "A republic's center of gravity is its electoral process. And if our electoral process is compromised—whether it be from domestic actors or foreign—that's reason enough to do whatever you can to protect it." At this late hour America's center of gravity is wavering, and its last firewall is now on the line.

VIRGINIA THOMAS

Some of the most influential movers and shakers in politics are not household names. They don’t hold public office, host a talk show or donate millions to candidate campaigns; they operate more or less in the shadows. This profile fits one of D.C.’s most powerful divas, Virginia “Ginni” Thomas, the big, bad blond wife of the longest serving and furthest right Supreme Court Justice, Clarence Thomas.

“I regard her as one of the three or four most influential conservative activists in the country,” says writer Stephen Moore, who advised Trump’s campaign. “She has channels into the White House that gets her stuff on the President’s desk.” Her “stuff” is a toxic brew of wingnut delusions, racist obsessions and idiotic conspiracy theories, all proudly detailed on her Facebook page—and all funneled into the ear of her husband, who rules on some of the most controversial issues in the nation.

Unlike many conservatives, who found their way into the GOP after flirting with the Democrats or being an independent, Ginni has been a right-winger almost from the cradle. In high school in Omaha, Nebraska, she was in the Republican Club and stated that her ultimate ambition was to run for Congress. But she never tossed her hat into that ring, preferring to work with the network of lobby groups and conservative organizations that support Republicans in the limelight. After graduating from law school, she went to work for the United States Chamber of Commerce, the leading voice pushing business profits over labor rights and all other values in society. Testifying before Congress back in the ’80s, she advocated killing the Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA), which guarantees workers paid time off to deal with illness or other critical family issues. Like universal healthcare, every other advanced nation in the world offers some form of paid medical leave, and not only for compassionate reasons, but to help stop the spread of epidemic diseases.

Low-income workers in America often don’t stay home when they get sick because they can’t afford it, working paycheck to paycheck to make ends meet. Staying home to get well can be a choice between paying rent or being evicted. So how fucking stupid was Thomas’s opposition to FMLA? Think about the health crisis we are facing right now. Then imagine a waiter serving your meal, coughing all over your food as they’re coming down with coronavirus. But they can’t afford to take off, and if they are diagnosed with COVID-19, they can’t afford the sky-high deductibles of their medical plan, if they even have one. So while Ginni and the Chamber of Commerce are worried about maximizing profits, the coronavirus craters the whole American economy. Brilliant policy. Thanks, Ginni. You just earned your first Asshole star.

After the Chamber of Commerce gig, Thomas went to work for the Department of Labor, where she fought equal pay legislation mandating comparable pay for women and men performing the same jobs. Of course basic equality and fairness are a drag on corporate profits, so ditch those too! Next, she was hired as a policy analyst by Texas Republican Dick Armey. In 1987 she met and married Clarence Thomas, who was successfully nominated for the Supreme Court by George Bush Sr. in 1991, after contentious confirmation hearings where lawyer Anita Hill alleged that Clarence had sexually harassed her as an underling at the Department of Education and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Like Melania Trump, Ginni stood by her man the whole time, wondering, Why are they trying to destroy him? Maybe because he’s a despicable chauvinist dick who has no real respect for women or their reproductive rights.

After earning her Mrs. degree, Ginni quit a job at the Heritage Foundation to launch a series of right-wing lobby groups. The first, Liberty Central, was founded with $1.5 million in anonymous donations to oppose Obama’s “hard-left” agenda, in particular the Affordable Care Act (ACA). When the Supreme Court was set to rule on the constitutionality of the ACA, 70 Democratic members of Congress urged Clarence Thomas to recuse himself from that decision, considering his wife’s flagrant lobbying efforts against the healthcare legislation. He refused to do so, eventually delivering a dissenting opinion against the majority ruling upholding the ACA. Then, while the Court was deciding the disastrous Citizens United case (allowing unlimited corporate money to flood politics), Liberty Central received an anonymous contribution of $550,000—a clear conflict of interest and damn close to a bribe. Of course, Clarence again refused to recuse himself.

And that’s the real problem with Clarence and Ginni. Most Supreme Court Justices lean either left or right, of course, but they’re supposed to be above the partisan fray, making high-minded decisions based on the law and precedent, not political pressure and raw loot stuffed in their pockets. But Clarence is famously silent on many SCOTUS cases, hardly uttering a word for years at a time. Why question the litigants to tease out the issues when your mind is already made up with a set of rigid, inflexible conservative “principles,” reinforced by your wingnut wife’s feverish pillow talk? “The one person he really listens to is Virginia,” said a longtime friend. “He depends on her for advice.”

Here’s a sampling of the rubbish advice she pushes: After a woman was killed by neo-Nazis in the Charlottesville Unite the Right rally, Ginni the Ninny actually lambasted Republican leaders for not speaking out against left-wing violence! “Liberal fascists have their useful idiots,” she wrote on Facebook.

After NFL quarterback Colin Kaepernick protested endemic discrimination in America by kneeling during the national anthem, she claimed that the NFL was “mainstreaming anti-Americanism” and that the Left is trying “to extinguish our rights.” Like what? The all-American right to protest?

After teenagers across America began organizing for greater gun control after the horrific Parkland High shooting in Florida, Ginni ridiculed them as “dangerous to the survival of the nation.” No, you brain-dead bitch, those poor kids are just trying to survive until adulthood without getting massacred. Even their leader, David Hogg, admits he respects the Second Amendment, but just wants more reasonable legislation to keep guns out of the hands of homicidal nut cases.

Ginni’s especially fond of pumping out Trump’s racist memes about immigrants on her Facebook page, smearing all Latinos as carjackers and murderers in the “war zone” of California. She has accused Obama and Hillary Clinton of “wiretapping” Donald Trump and alleged that Democrats had committed voter fraud in four midterm races, without naming them or citing a shred of evidence—ludicrous conspiracy theories concocted out of thin air. And believe it or not, Ginni has even sent memos to Trump with a hit list of “snakes” in his administration who are not loyal enough—as if Trump, of all people, needs encouragement to make kissing his fat ass the main criterion for appointments. Hell, that’s about the only criterion in this musical chairs administration.

When Liberty Central went belly up, Ginni launched Liberty Consulting, a one-woman lobby shop for conservative causes. In 2019 she gave birth to yet another nonprofit PAC named American D-Day, devoted to pumping up support for the orange orangutan’s reelection. If that happens, it could be D day all right—as in the death of democracy. Trump has hinted many times that he would love to “rule” for more than two terms, and he has all the instincts of a sociopathic dictator. To suspend elections, all he would need is the right crisis…and of course more ignorant, goose-stepping supporters like Ginni Thomas. H

THE ART OF THE NUDE SELFIE

Sex workers are multitalented, especially when it comes to photography. Face it: Your favorite cam model is not flanked by an army of stylists; she's doing this all on her own and looking drop-dead sexy in the process. For her, taking a perfect selfie is so much more than point, shoot and post—this is her livelihood, and competition is fierce. So how do you stand out while highlighting your best assets in the process? Here's what we gleaned from some of the sexiest shutterbugs to ever pick up a smartphone:

Jolene 'Ol' Squirty Bastard' Brody: "Natural side light is my favorite for taking nude selfies! I personally love the way my body looks with a bit of morning light through my bedroom window when I'm still rolling around in bed." Twitter: @Jolene_Brody

Katie Banks: "The number-one rule for a good selfie is to take a bunch. Mix up your facial expressions for variation. Experiment with angles—high, low, straight—so you get a range of images to choose from. Don't forget to pop the twins! Squeeze your shoulder blades together just slightly and pop your chest out while tightening up for that extra perk. I wouldn't recommend sitting, it's not flattering; kneeling, standing or lying down allows for better posture and better body shapes. You should avoid selfies in the bathroom because bathrooms have the worst lighting! Plus, a toilet in the background isn't sexy. Finally, tidy up what's directly behind you, and remember that anything closest to your camera—hand, boobs, forehead, etc.—will look disproportionately larger." Twitter: @KatieBanksDD

Misha Mayfair: "There are a few basic rules that make all the difference in today's competitive nude-sharing world. First is good lighting—take your nudes bathing in natural light or at least using a basic ring light; it's much more flattering to the body. Work your angles! Find which part of your body you want to exaggerate, and focus on that; not everything can pop at once. Watermark your nudes with the name of the person you're sending them to in a place that can't be easily edited out. That way you know exactly who's shared them if it happens." Twitter: @MishaMayfair

GoAskAlex: "It's all about lighting. Make sure there is light coming from behind your phone, not behind you. There are many styles of small rechargeable LED ring lights that you can clip onto your phone. They run around $10 each." Twitter: @GoAskAlexMFC

"Useless laws weaken the necessary laws." —MONTESQUIEU, PHILOSOPHER

VIRGINIA IS FOR LOVERS

Every state has their embarrassing legal relics—you know, those antiquated laws that are still somehow on the books today, leaving police to wonder, Am I really supposed to arrest this guy for cheating on his wife? (a felony in Michigan).

This month we focus on Virginia, where legislators took a real lulu off the books. According to CNN, in the state's code, "fornication"—consensual sex with an unmarried person—wasn't legal. Guilty parties could be made to pay a $250 fine. Though a 2005 Virginia Supreme Court decision struck the law down, citing it as an "unconstitutional government intrusion," it remained in the code until this year.

Delegate Mark Levine, who introduced the legislation to repeal it, told CNN that fornication was still being charged as a crime as recently as five years ago, when prosecutors wanted to pile on charges against people accused of sex crimes.

What makes the whole situation slightly less hilarious is the realization that Virginia is not the only state living under the yolk of repressive and bizarrely unconstitutional sex laws. To wit:

- Fornication is still considered a crime in the Potato State. Any unmarried person in Idaho found guilty of having sex with another unmarried person can be fined up to $300, imprisoned for up to six months, or both.
- Things get nebulous in North Carolina, where an unmarried man and woman "lewdly and lasciviously" sharing a bed or cohabiting could be sentenced to six days in jail and be made to pay a $1,000 fine.
- Mississippi: "Hold my beer!" Fornication is a $500 fine with up to six months in county jail.

But some states are finally moving forward—Massachusetts repealed its fornication crime statute in 2018, as did Utah the following year. Incidentally, here's a money-making idea: color-coded sex maps of the U.S., essential for all road trippers living in sin.

KINK-FRIENDLY DIGS

The modern sharing economy is…complicated. On the one hand, I should be able to do whatever the hell I want with my car or home. On the other hand, the near complete absence of regulation makes it a legit concern for neighbors and women who don't want to be sexually harassed by their uber-creepy driver.

And with the recent Airbnb AI scandal, users are now finding themselves targeted through the use of dubious technology that identifies and bans consensual sex workers by way of their digital footprint. And you know what they say about slippery slopes… Anyone could be next.

Which is why it's so great to see the emergence of parallel services for marginalized communities. For a couple years now, KinkBNB provides what Airbnb won't, namely access to sex-positive spaces and a dignified, non-prejudicial user experience, as reported by The Huffington Post.

A "rental marketplace for the sexually adventurous," KinkBNB is subscription-based; this gets you unlimited messaging with other users, while an escrow service provides hosts and guests with the means to safeguard transactions. There are standard fees for bookers and hosts, but the takeaway here is the community-driven structure that promotes communication and transparency.

Cofounder Ryan Galiotto says he wants to bring people together and help kinksters connect with like-minded folks in new cities. "It is not always easy to find where to go in a new city. But if you stay with someone already in the community, you have a host and guide."

Galiotto, who is also a cofounder of San Francisco's Wicked Grounds, wants users to have a safe and open experience: You should be able to go out of town and rent a dungeon or play space without having to hide who you are. Hundreds signed up overnight, and today they offer access to play spaces in over 460 cities worldwide.

CHINA'S IRON FIST SOFTENS

As the world grapples with the prospect of a coronavirus pandemic, we are getting word from deep inside Chinese borders that government officials—in a fit of unbridled benevolence—seem to be easing up restrictions on porn as a way of helping people deal with this very unpleasant situation.

Yes, you read that right: China is freeing up porn to soothe the masses, with so many stuck at home or quarantined due to the COVID-19. Now, what constitutes "illegal" content in China is broadly defined, including works that "endanger national unity," "leak state secrets," and/or "disturb social order." This criteria is intentionally vague and gives the government a wide latitude when squashing dissidence. So Weibo (the Chinese Twitter, heavily regulated by the State) users rejoiced when Tencent Holdings (a Chinese multinational conglomerate holding company with subsidiaries in entertainment, AI and technology) lifted a ban on their video download application, allowing for increased download speeds at no charge. Weibo patrons immediately proceeded to share photos and names of favorite porn stars, including Haruka Hoshino and Yuna Ogura.

If only Russians could catch a break too. Unfortunately, China's neighbors are caught in the crosshairs of a sex toy shortage, all thanks to the coronavirus. According to one retailer with locations across Russia, a very high percentage of the world's sex toys are produced in China (irony?), and with borders shut down, that means no vibes or butt plugs from Yakutsk to Moscow. Never was there a more important time to buy American.

BEAVER FEVER HEATS UP HUSTLER HOLLYWOOD

Colorado isn’t typically known for its warm winters, but it was plenty hot in Colorado Springs on January 31, as HUSTLER Hollywood opened its new store. The reason behind the unseasonably hot temperature? The presence of Ryan Taylor, HUSTLER’s 2020 Beaver of the Year.

Taylor, who resides in Denver, was on hand to meet fans and sign copies of the April 2020 HUSTLER, which boasts a ten-page photo-spread featuring the sexy 28-year-old in all her naked glory. In addition to enthusiastic fans and customers, the grand opening event also drew media attention, with radio personality Cheeba, of Colorado Springs’ 96.1 The Beat, interviewing Taylor about a number of topics, including her decision to submit photos to HUSTLER’s iconic amateur showcase.

“I’ve been in the adult industry for ten years now, and I was like, Ah, why not? What’s the worst that could happen—I don’t get published?” Taylor recalled. “The best that could happen is literally this—I would be Beaver of the Year. And it worked out in my favor.”

Indeed it did. It also turned out pretty favorably for HUSTLER readers, who decisively voted for Taylor in the contest. In a field of 15 candidates, this Beaver took the prize by a landslide.

As for what the future holds, Taylor—whose passions include painting and roller-skating—told the radio personality, “Probably doing a lot more work with HUSTLER, doing some events, potentially doing some more shoots with them. Hopefully that works out in my favor.”

No doubt that would make our readers happy too! Make sure to check out Ryan’s full pictorial in the April 2020 HUSTLER. And log on to HUSTLER-Magazine.com for an exclusive interview with the new Queen of Beavers.

FIND YOUR FUNNY BONE

Giant dinosaurs, gorgeous architecture and a thriving arts scene are just a few of the perks to visiting Palm Springs, arguably California’s best-kept secret. And while this inland gem is often overshadowed by a certain music festival that shall remain nameless, the city is fast becoming a hub for solid, all-killer-no-filler comedy and stand-up. Screw the beach—this summer’s hot ticket is a joke.

The Palm Springs International Comedy Festival (PSICF) runs May 22nd to 25th and holds the distinction of constantly outdoing itself every year with a roster packed to the gills with comedy legends. In 2019, D-list queen and HUSTLER favorite Kathy Griffin received the PSICF Comedian of the Year Award, with the gorgeous and talented Illeana Douglas (swoon!) receiving the hallowed PSICF Pioneer in Comedy Award. And while you trip all over these names we’re dropping, a few more: Jane Fonda, Diane Keaton, Mary Steenburgen, Candice Bergen, Ed Begley Jr., Don Johnson, Craig T. Nelson, Andy Garcia, Wallace Shawn and Alicia Silverstone were also on hand.

Last year’s gala guests were treated to a full half-hour set from Griffin during her acceptance speech, so you never know what surprises are in store. As of press time, organizers were still keeping this year’s guest stars under tight wraps, but here’s a sneak peak...

The “Love Goddess” herself, Judy Tenuta (Borat, Dolemite Is My Name, Coming to America 2), will be honored this year, with Anne Ramsay (Bombshell, Mad About You, A League of Their Own) confirmed as a celebrity guest judge. The festivities kick off with a star-studded red carpet event, followed by a bevy of competitions, film screenings and parties that stretch into the wee hours. For tickets and more info, go to PalmSpringsComedyFest.com.

CAPTIVATING

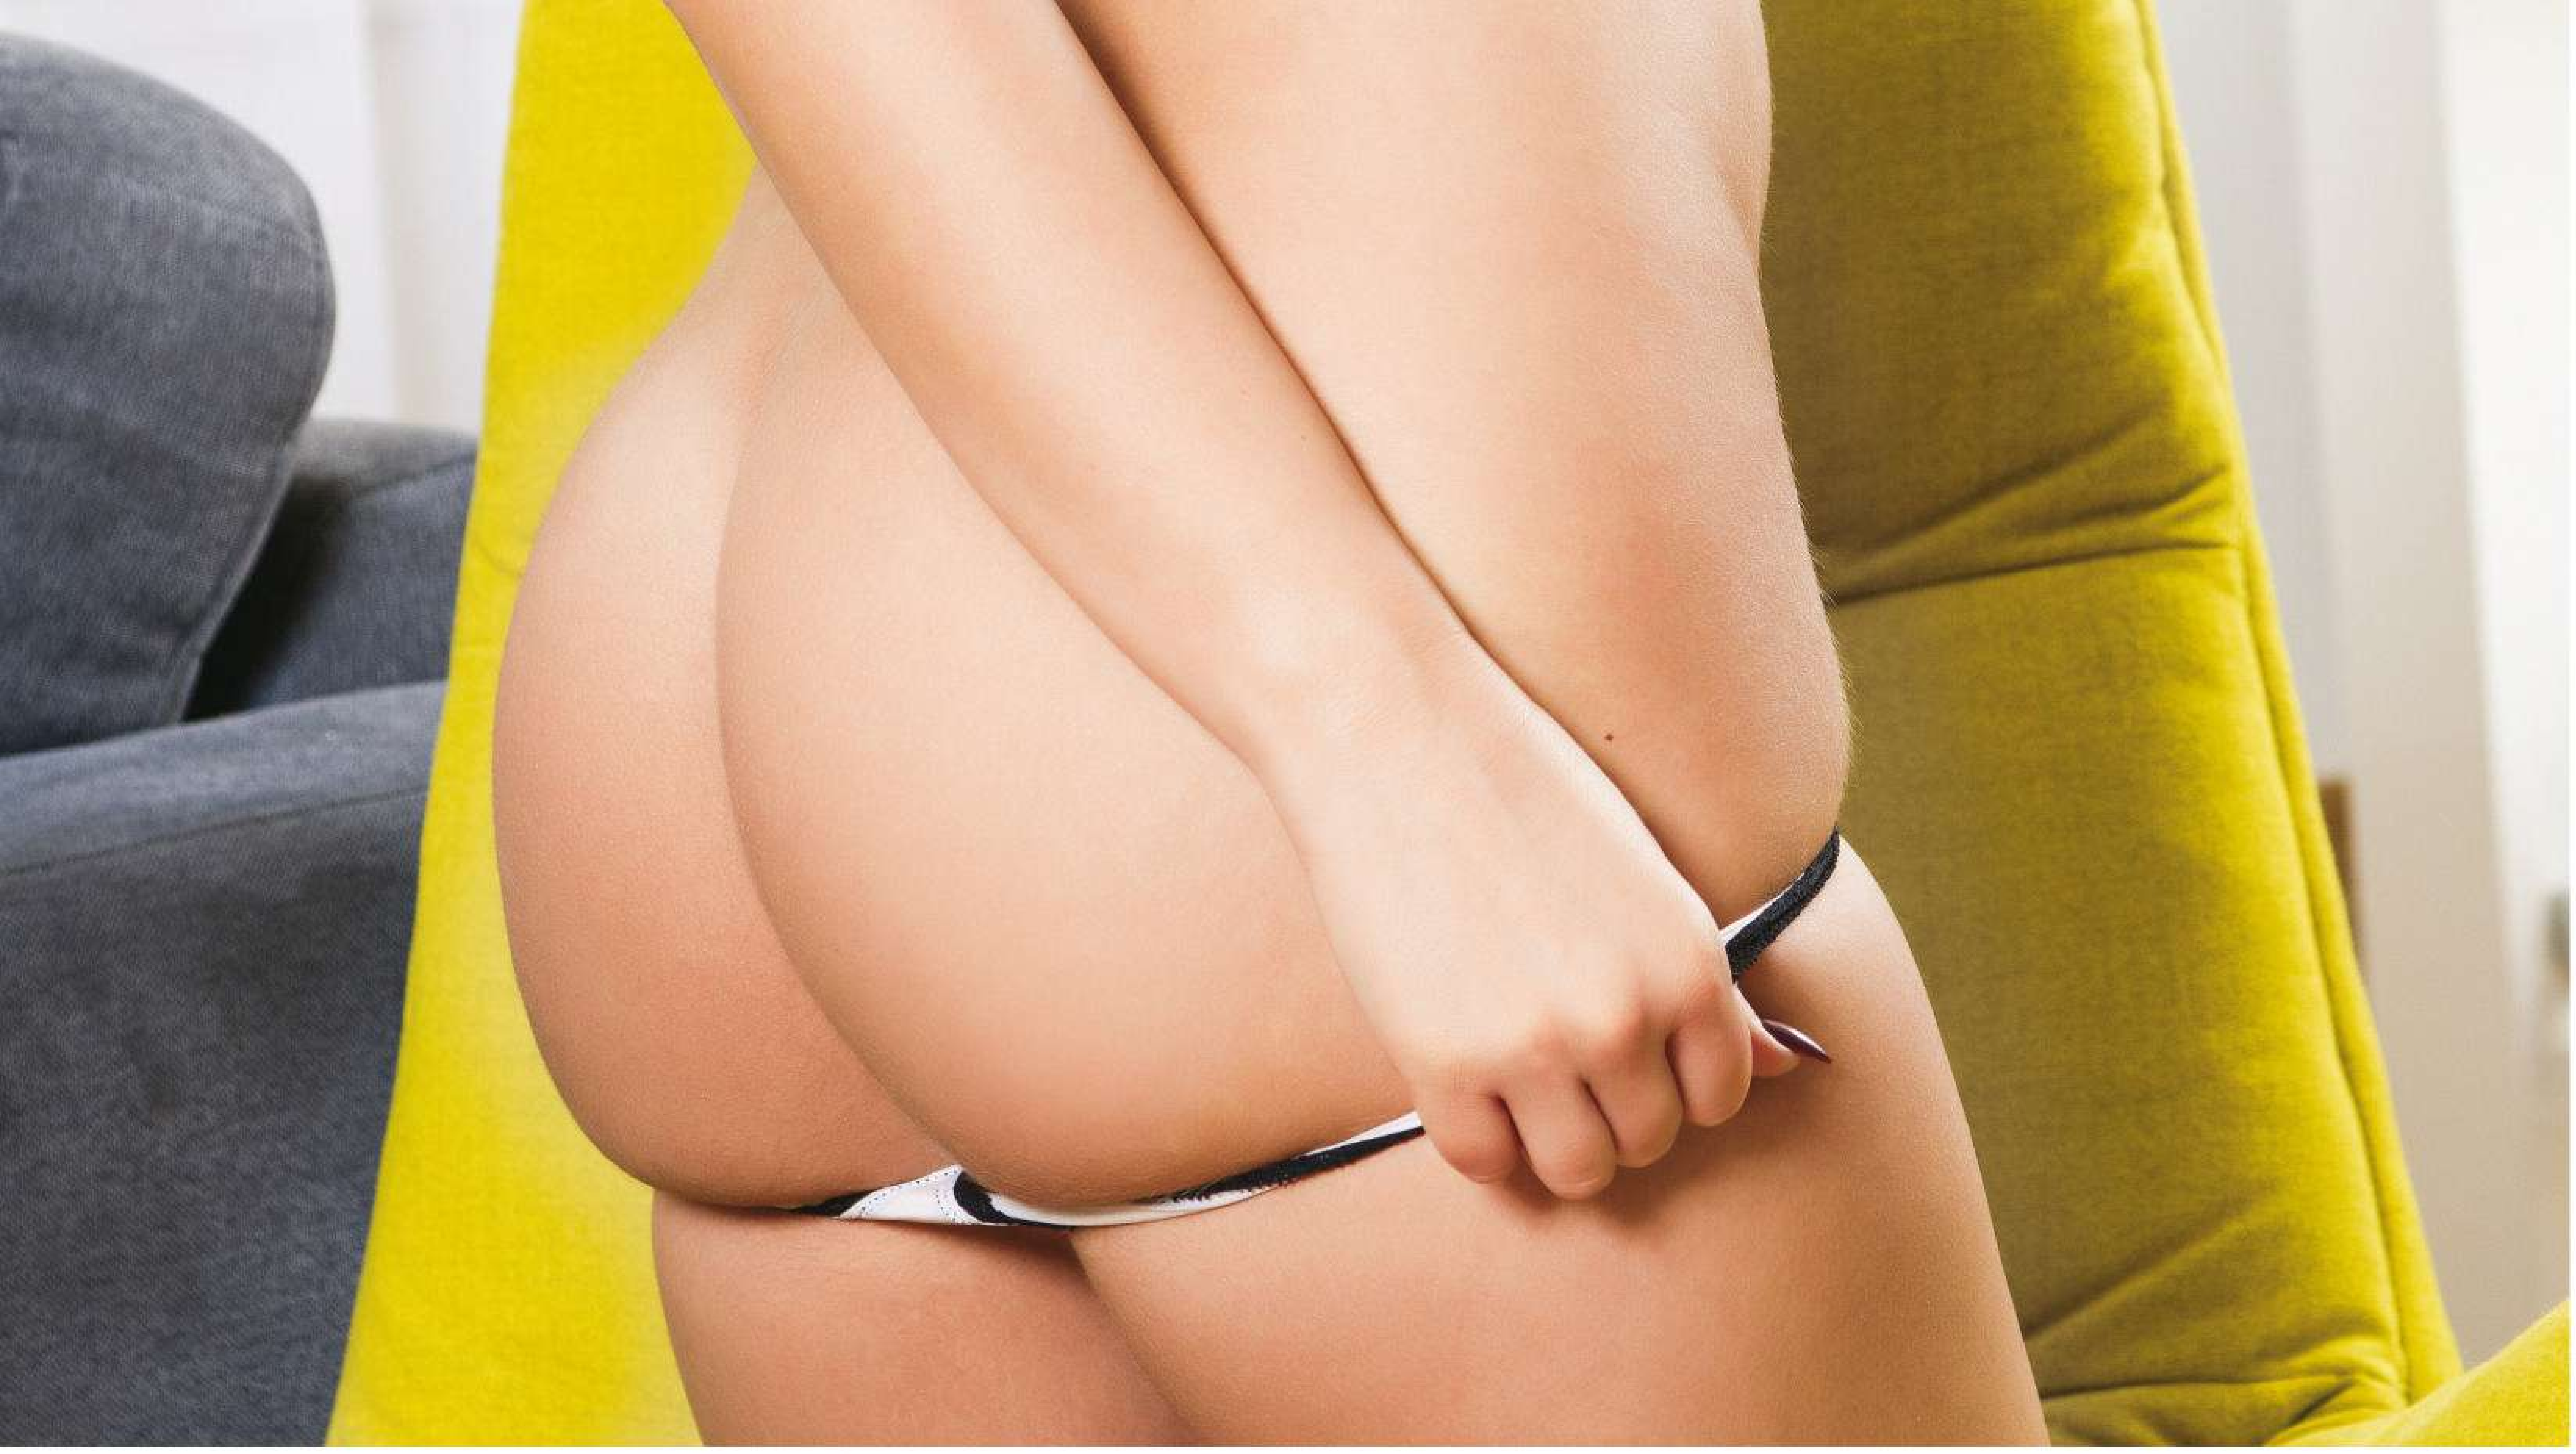
STEVEN ANDRES



Loren lives across the alley from me, and truth is, I've been watching her since she moved in a month ago. It took her a good three weeks to notice me always pressed against my window, waiting for a glimpse of something naughty. When she did notice, she just smiled and started to leave the curtains wide open. And this afternoon she gave me a full-on show. First she made certain she had my attention. Then she teased her clothes off slowly, caressed her breasts and her long, long legs. Pulling a chair right in front of her window, she began to masturbate, dipping her fingers into wet, pink heaven. Jesus! I am one lucky fuck.

THE PERFECT COMBINATION

PHOTOGRAPHY BY TAMMY SANDS

I've been everywhere from Brisbane to Dubai, from London to Mexico City. I enjoy all of the places I've traveled, but I especially like warm weather. When it's cloudy or cold, I yearn for the sun. I feel lucky that I get to explore the world, but if I hadn't become a model, I would have tried to become a secret agent. Seriously! My greatest wish is to be invisible, a master of disguise, and spies get to do that and travel. What a perfect combination!" —Eufrat

Being in school, working and working out makes for an exhausting schedule, but success and achievement don't come without a price, and that price is effort. I've learned that the absolute best thing a person can do in life is invest in yourself. Learn more, earn more, and never give up on your dreams! I'm an active person, and I've got a ton of energy. When I masturbate, I think about females, and I find the female body to be incredibly beautiful."

HOW TO BE A PORN STAR

PHOTOGRAPHY BY
LARRY FLYNT PRODUCTIONS

When I was growing up, all I did was listen to music. I never watched TV, I skipped school, I smoked weed, and I spent as much time listening to music as I could. I like anything with a chill beat to wake me up and put me in a good mood. I didn't have a huge social life growing up, and I'm still shy sometimes, but interacting with my fans helps me with that. I love my fans!

"Before porn, I was webcamming. Then one day I googled 'how to become a porn star,' and an agent's name popped up. Next thing you know, I'm moving from Texas to L.A. When I shot my first scene, I wasn't even nervous. Doing porn isn't just about making money for me. I actually really enjoy it! My very favorite part of being a performer is making my partners come."

I’m funny and very caring, and I love really hard. I wanted to be a model because…well, who doesn’t want to be a model? Let’s see—my favorite food is ramen, and I can watch a whole Netflix series in a day, easy. My most memorable sex was the time I fucked a guy in a cemetery. Why was that memorable? How was it not?! I fucked him in a cemetery! Passion turns me on more than anything—when someone is really into sex. And right now I’m in the perfect relationship. It’s perfect because we understand each other and motivate each other to do better every day. We want to see each other win.”

THERE ONCE WAS A FLOOZIE NAMED ANNIE,
WHOSE PRICES WERE COZY, BUT CANNY.
FIFTY CENTS FOR A SUCK,
A BUCK FOR A FUCK,
AND A DIME TO COP A FEEL OF HER FANNY.

A man was talking to his son, who was about to graduate from high school. "Do you want to go to college?"

"No," the boy replied, "I want to be a pizza delivery guy or a plumber."

His dad yelped, "Stop watching porn, son!"

Question: What do a bra and bar have in common?

Answer: Both keep men eagerly waiting until they open.

A newly married sailor was informed by the Navy that he'd be stationed on a remote island in the Pacific for a year. Tearfully he and his bride parted.

Soon the sailor began to miss the love of his life, so he wrote her a letter: "We are going to be separated for a long time," he mentioned. "I miss you already, and there's not much to do here in the evening if I don't leave the base. My buddies say there are young, attractive girls all over this island. Do you think a hobby would keep me from being tempted?"

A couple of weeks later the sailor received a small package containing a harmonica and a short note. "Why don't you learn to play this?" his wife wrote.

Once the sailor's deployment ended, he rushed back to his beloved. "Darling," he announced, "I can't wait to get you into bed so we can make love all night long."

His wife kissed him, then growled, "Yeah, yeah, yeah! But first let's see you play something on that fuckin' harmonica!"

Question: What do you get when a bookie marries a gambler?

Answer: An odds couple.

A 93-year-old man met a 79-year-old woman at the senior center, and they ended up in bed. Three days later he noticed that his dick was developing a drip, so he decided to have a checkup.

"Have you recently engaged in sex?" the doctor inquired.

"As a matter of fact I have," the 93-year-old proudly replied.

"Do you know where your partner is right now?" the doctor prodded.

"Yes, I do," the geezer told him, "but why do you wanna know?"

"Because you'd better get over there," the doctor advised. "You're about to come!"

Pop Quiz: Rearrange these sets of letters to form words: P-N-E-I-S and B-U-T-T-S-X-E. Did you end up with spine and subtext? Neither did we.

A bartender was getting ready to close for the evening when a man burst in and pulled out a gun. "This is a robbery!" the intruder yelled. "Put all your money in a bag!"

"Don't shoot me!" the barkeep pleaded. "I'll do whatever you say." He stuffed all the money from the cash register into a bag and handed it over.

The crook snatched the loot, then put his gun to the bartender's head. "Okay, give me a blowjob," he demanded.

"I'll do anything!" the barkeep insisted. "Just don't shoot me!"

He quickly got on his knees and began sucking the holdup man's pecker. After a few minutes, the guy got so excited from the blowjob that he dropped his weapon.

The bartender picked it up and handed it back to the robber. "Keep holding the damn gun!" he ordered. "One of my customers might walk in!"

THE WOMEN OF MMA

KICKING ASS AND TAKING NAMES

BY JOSH CHESLER

The clock reads 5 a.m., and the sun is not yet up in Orange County, California. A few years ago UFC fighter Ashlee Evans-Smith would still have been tucked in bed, leaving that pre-dawn hour to begrudging commuters and obnoxious early birds.

It's not that Evans-Smith found some magical way to become a morning person during her mixed martial arts journey. She just realized that if she wants to squeeze in close to a half-dozen training sessions at various Southern California gyms over the course of one day, she needs to start early.

"People see all of the things I do, and they always ask 'Do you ever sleep?'" Evans-Smith laughs. "It's that and, 'You must drink a lot of coffee!' I have to sleep because it's how my body recovers, but I think I actually run better on five or six hours of sleep. Occasionally I have a day where I don't set an alarm and I let my body rest, but most of the time it's just a lot of coffee. It helps that I'm extremely organized too, so I know what I'm doing every single hour, and I get a lot of stuff done."

But the loss of sleep for the flyweight combatant known as Rebel Girl is far from the only sacrifice endured by Evans-Smith and other high-level mixed martial artists. From missing important social dates and family time to swapping Thanksgiving dinner for a protein shake when cutting weight in the weeks before a competition, a fighter's life means months of sacrifice before each bout inside the cage.

After her 6 a.m. conditioning session, Evans-Smith gets a quick break to go home and shower before packing her bag for the rest of the day. With her commutes from one gym to the next in the relentless SoCal traffic added to the multihour sessions she spends perfecting her striking (such as Muay Thai and boxing) and grappling (primarily wrestling and Brazilian jiujitsu), Evans-Smith often doesn't return home until well into the evening.

Rather than calling it a night and going to bed at a reasonable hour, that's when Evans-Smith finally has the time to take on all of the projects and duties that come with being a semi-public figure in 2020. Whether it's keeping up with her sponsors and social media responsibilities, booking the latest guest for her podcast Sex and Violence With Rebel Girl or simply preparing whatever vegan meals will keep her going through the next grueling day, the veteran fighter's time away from the gym isn't exactly what most people would consider relaxing.

Even on the rare day off from training, when Evans-Smith isn't booked to do a photoshoot or add a credit to her burgeoning acting career, you can usually still find the California native causing some good-natured trouble of one kind or another.

"There are a lot of times when my body is really sore, but I have enough energy to do something," Evans-Smith says. "If the weather is right—or even if it's not right—I'll go to the beach because I love the beach, and every time I go, it's like the first time I've ever gone to the beach and just puts me in a really happy, calm mood. I'll go out with friends sometimes too, and it's pretty rare that a punk rock show falls on the same day that I have a free day, but if that's possible, that's like magic for me. It's rejuvenating because it's a reminder that after I finish grinding for that fight camp, I get to play and live my life again." >>

"I DON'T WANT TO HIDE THE FACT THAT WE'RE HUMAN AND NOT MACHINES. WE HAVE GOOD DAYS AND BAD DAYS..."

—ASHLEE EVANS-SMITH

While Evans-Smith can look back at all of the punk shows and wild nights out during her college wrestling days and the months thereafter, before fighting took over her life, some of the UFC's rising stars haven't known much life outside of the sport. Twenty-three-year-old flyweight prospect and former Legacy Fighting Alliance champion Sabina Mazo won her first professional fight in her native Colombia immediately after her 18th birthday and celebrated her 21st birthday by winning her first championship.

Her commitment to fighting brought her from Medellin to Huntington Beach, California, just before her 19th birthday. It's a city she's grown to appreciate as her home while working to mix a college education into her busy fighting career—all in a nonnative language no less. But even though the average training day for the Colombian Queen begins at 6:30 a.m. and doesn't end until 8 or 9 most nights, the hectic Monday-through-Saturday schedule and constant battling of injuries is a small price to pay for the life she's wanted to live since she was a teenager.

"There are times when it feels like a job, but I love to train, and I love the family I have here at Kings MMA, so it's always worth it," Mazo affirms. "When I'm not training, I do a lot of massage and stretching to help my body recover, and I like being outside in nature, so I always try to do something active, like go for a run in a park or go to the beach on my day off or even when I have lunch."

No matter how unique her day job might be, Mazo's not all that different from most women her age when she's not practicing the different ways she can remove her opponent from consciousness and improve her 8-1 professional record. Most nights you can either find her spending time with friends or passed out in front of a Netflix screen.

But while some of her fellow classmates and peers may paint their nails out of habit or to match their outfit for a night out, Mazo's #SelfCareSunday routine is a little deeper than that. Although the manicure began as a way to calm herself and feel good in the midst of a tough training camp, her dark red nail polish has become a violent and symbolic ritual ahead of every fight.

> “IT’S SUCH A DIFFICULT SPORT THAT I FEEL LIKE WE’RE ALL CHAMPIONS WHEN WE STEP IN THERE, WIN OR LOSE.”
> —RAQUEL PENNINGTON

“Every camp and every fight is different, but—this is going to sound really crazy—I have my nails red because I like to see blood in my fights,” Mazo said. “I always want to see her blood and damage her slowly on my way to getting that victory. It’s kind of psycho for me to say that, I guess, but I always do that before a fight.”

It’s the afternoon of one of the largest UFC pay-per-view cards of the year, and Raquel Pennington is catching a quick nap.

In a couple of hours the perennial women’s bantamweight contender will be stepping into the octagon to put her body, mind and career on the line in front of millions of people, but she’s not about to let that interrupt her routine for fight day.

“I like to have as normal of a day as possible and just kind of relax a little bit,” Pennington says. “It’s more of a down day for me, so I’m focused on keeping my body at rest and my mind at ease. I like to listen to a lot of music and just zone in on everything I’ve envisioned. Once I get to the arena and get through my drug testing, my coach usually brings a pillow for me so I can go back into the locker room and take a little bit of a power nap, depending on where I’m fighting on the card. After that I start stretching it out and watching some of the other fights on the TV in the locker room while I get ready. Then I get my hands wrapped, warm up, and it’s go time.”

To be fair, Pennington’s earned the right to watch TV, nap or do whatever else she needs to do on the day of a fight. After nearly seven years with the promotion—much of which has been spent near the top of her division—Rocky knows what she needs to do to compete with the best women in the world.

As a member of the first female season of UFC’s reality show The Ultimate Fighter, Pennington is still viewed as a trailblazer for both women in MMA as well as the LGBTQ community, after sharing her coming-out story on basic cable back in 2013.

Up until then Pennington’s dream of being one of the first women in the UFC seemed preposterous to most of the MMA community. For that matter, when she began her career as an amateur in 2009, it was still a full two years before UFC president Dana White would make his historically incorrect statement that women would never fight in the world’s largest MMA promotion—a statement he’d have to walk back a year later, when Ronda Rousey became an undeniable star and effectively forced White to allow women into the UFC.

Pennington’s home life is every bit as stable as her role in building the women’s UFC divisions. Engaged to fellow fighter Tecia Torres and proud parent to a litter of “fur babies,” the Colorado native has found a way to schedule her busy days to balance her family time with training. In fact, Pennington still finds time to embrace her passion as a high school gymnastics coach. But while some may see it as the underdog fighter serving as an inspirational “follow your dreams” story, the coach says her students push her to improve every day.

“Little do those girls know, they inspire me to be better and grow as a professional athlete,” Pennington says of her gymnastics team. “Just watching how they work as a team and how they’re motivated by me, it’s a positive circle. They’re inspired by me living my dream, and it’s motivating for me to know that I have those people out there for me when I have success with anything that I do. It’s such a difficult sport that I feel like we’re all champions when we step in there, win or lose.”

That level of internal motivation and the knowledge of how hard she’s trained ahead of a fight helps Pennington to relax in the locker room before each bout. But that’s not necessarily the norm among professional fighters. >>

Evans-Smith, for example, openly admits that fight day for her is a roller coaster of emotions. She may wake up perfectly calm, but then get in her own head and become anxious by the time breakfast is over. A routine pre-fight hair-braiding session in the hotel room can swing back and forth between visualizing victory and defeat, and the short bus ride from the hotel to the arena with the other fighters can plant butterflies in her stomach.

"I might feel super confident and super grateful that this is what I'm doing with my life, but then ten minutes later I'm like, Why am I doing this? I have a degree! I could be sitting at a desk, and instead I'm about to go get punched in the face! My grandpa doesn't want me to do this! Do I want to do this?" Evans-Smith confides. "You try to control these emotions, but we're all human, and it's just part of the ride. You have to ride the roller coaster, and you can't stop it."

But those doubts and nerves are just a part of the life that combat sports athletes sign up for. It's a part of the adrenaline rush that so many fighters try to find a replacement for after they retire. Most find it exceptionally difficult to match the fight-or-flight instincts that kick in when you know you're about to go toe-to-toe with someone who's just as confident as you are—and one of you will likely be demoralized and potentially injured in front of your friends, family and millions of strangers.

On the other hand, those 15 minutes in the spotlight—or 25 minutes, for championship fights and main events—are exactly what the fighters have spent most of their adult lives training for and the only opportunity to show off what they've been working on for all of those long hours. Unlike many traditional sports, where athletes compete several times per year, most mixed martial artists only have three or four fights annually, assuming everything goes smoothly and they escape serious injury.

For someone like Mazo, that opportunity is enough to overcome any emotions that might pop up before competing. In the days building up to a match, the typically friendly striker sheds her smile to channel the stoic warrior within. By the time fight night rolls around, Mazo is focused on making the most of the bout she's been training for and bringing her precise techniques to a brutal war in the cage.

"I like to fight, and I like that environment of being at the gym, so I always spend time with people from the gym [on fight days]," Mazo said. "I don't like the distractions from other people, so I just wake myself up by training with Master [Rafael Cordeiro, head coach of Kings MMA] and try to receive the energy from the people from the gym. It's kind of like that feeling before war, where you know that you're going to give your all, so you have to have that really good energy around you. There are a lot of good moments there, and I just really try to enjoy them. I try to be in the moment, enjoy all of it, and not think about what's going to happen in the future, because when you think about the future, you lose the present. You don't get to fight every weekend, so when you do, you have to enjoy every single second of it. You can be nervous sometimes, but you have to enjoy it too, because that's where you want to be."

Realistically speaking, there's a good chance no woman in MMA would be where they are today if not for Cristiane Justino Venâncio—better known as Cris Cyborg.

A legend of the sport by every definition of the word, Cyborg put women's MMA on the map when she demolished Gina Carano (now best known as a core part of Baby Yoda's security team on The Mandalorian) for the inaugural Strikeforce Women's Featherweight Championship back in 2009. The fight was the first women's bout to headline a major mixed martial arts event, and the five-minute beating showed fans not only that women could throw down just as well as men, but also that Cyborg was considerably better than the one person who was perceived as her biggest competition.

"When I first came to America, I wasn't sure how much people would be able to appreciate my career as a fighter or how the bigger promotions would treat me," Cyborg says. "After the [Carano] fight, a lot of girls came up to me and told me that they started training because of that fight. A lot of people talk about that fight, but that's the most important thing to me. I like that a lot of girls started training because they saw that fight."

Over a decade later there are still very few names in the sport bigger than Cyborg's. The historic featherweight has become the first person to add Invicta, UFC—where they effectively created a featherweight division just to sign her—and Bellator championships to her résumé, destroying every opponent put in front of her, with the exception of the current UFC double-champion Amanda Nunes. She's arguably become the most feared woman in combat sports history due to her high skill level, strength and penchant for violent maulings and knockout finishes, and her impact has helped raise all of women's MMA to where it is today. Other major stars like Ronda Rousey and Holly Holm may have never had the opportunity to reach their levels of fame if not for Cyborg opening eyes to the potential success of women's divisions. On a Mount Rushmore of women's mixed martial arts, it would be impossible not to include Cris Cyborg's face.

—CRIS CYBORG

Of course, the sport has changed a lot since Cyborg debuted in 2005, and she has grown a lot with it. Rather than sticking with a single team of coaches and training partners, the 34-year-old has opened up her own private gym in her adopted hometown of Huntington Beach, where she can both host a training camp and visit the other elite trainers and gyms in the area. It's part of how Cyborg has made sure to stay sharp enough to maintain a 22-2 record throughout her career and one reason she's always remained at or near the top of her division, while the challengers have come and gone several times over throughout the sport's evolution.

“It makes me really happy to see how women's MMA has grown,” Cyborg tells HUSTLER. “We have a lot of girls fighting now, and it's amazing to see the kids start training in MMA instead of just Muay Thai or boxing or [Brazilian jiujitsu]. I think in ten years, you're going to see girls in MMA who are amazing athletes, and that makes me really happy, because at the beginning of my career, there weren't a lot of girls. It was only myself and a few other people, so it's great to see how much it's grown and how big it will be in the future.”

As Cyborg is quick to point out, even with as far as women's mixed martial arts has come, there's still so much room for the sport to grow. Much like the generation of boys who grew up wanting to be UFC champions thanks to the success of early MMA stars like Chuck Liddell, Royce Gracie, Randy Couture and Fedor Emelianenko, there are now little girls who will spend their entire youth training in various disciplines because of their idolization of the likes of Cyborg, Evans-Smith, Pennington and Mazo.

While some fighters shy away from that responsibility as a role model, others acknowledge that it comes with the territory and embrace it. In the digital age, living up to your young fans' expectations goes beyond signing autographs and posing for photos at meet-and-greets. It can mean finding ways to inspire the next generation while giving them glimpses into what daily life is really like for a fighter on social media—even on the days when it's not quite as fun as many people's Instagrams would have you believe.

“Sometimes people forget that social media is just what you want people to see,” Evans-Smith explains. “A lot of people don't put the bad days or the grueling training sessions, but I think it's important to show people what it's really like and that just because you don't see something posted on social media doesn't mean it didn't happen. The other day I made a post thanking my strength and conditioning coach and admitted that I broke down crying that day. Someone was like, ‘Why would you put that?’ but I don't want to hide the fact that we're human and not machines. We have good days and bad days, and we have emotions. We let people in like that because we want their support, and we want to show them what it's really like.”

BARELY LEGAL #175: WET DREAMS

HUSTLER VIDEO. DIRECTOR: B. SKOW. STARRING: ELLA CRUZ, AFTEN OPAL, ALLIE NICOLE, JESSIE SAINT, DAMON DICE, QUINTON JAMES & KYLE MASON.

People can learn a lot from their dreams. I had one the other night where I was being chased through a minefield by a fire-breathing dragon with the face of Kellyanne Conway. I believe that one was telling me not to do bath salts after 9 p.m. There's a different lesson to be learned from Barely Legal #175: Wet Dreams—specifically, that little touches can make the difference between a humdrum spank flick and something really worth paying attention to. The setup is simple enough—lustworthy legal teens creaming their panties to erotic visions as they slumber—but the execution kicks the quality up a notch. We're not talking Inception-level explorations of the subconscious or anything, but the extra effort is appreciated. Exotic and cute, tawny-skinned brunette Ella Cruz drifts off into a hazy vision of a bearded beau macking on her. Cinematographic tricks with lighting and pacing bring a convincingly dreamlike quality to the proceedings. Of course, the meat and potatoes of any spank video is hot sex, not nuanced camerawork, and fortunately, Wet Dreams doesn't fall asleep at the wheel. Cruz's hips pump like pistons as she rides her dream lover's dick, and he humps her fiercely enough to wake the dead. Sweet-faced dirty blonde Aften Opal is the epitome of fresh, tight-bodied innocence. The doll-faced fuck puppet works herself into a lather as she imagines hoovering her man's balls and stroking his shaft. Wait, whose fantasy is this, anyway? Barely Legal #175: Wet Dreams will definitely keep viewers up. To order, call 800-763-8271 ext. 7651. —Pico D. Ribibi

LARGE NATURALS

GIRLGIRL.COM. DIRECTOR: ALAN X. STARRING: AUTUMN FALLS, NIA NACCI, ANGELA WHITE, GIANNA DIOR, JADE BAKER, GABBIE CARTER, DARCIE DOLCE, VALENTINA NAPPI & APRIL O'NEIL.

Packed with enough succulent breasts to put Foster Farms out of business, Large Naturals brings big, billowing new life to the phrase "It's the tits." Autumn Falls, with her mouthwatering milk mounds, gives herself a breast exam and discovers a suspected lump. Alarmed, she consults fellow big-topper Nia Nacci, who kneads Falls' melons and reassures her that she's fine before allowing Falls to massage her own fluffy chest pillows for comparison. Despite the grim specter of a life-threatening disease hanging over the scene, Falls and Nacci's coupling is white-hot. The camerawork takes every opportunity to showcase the bounty of teat meat provided here as the two frolic in full-bosomed bliss. A subsequent scene finds curvylicious Angela White playing a creepy chiropractor preying on Gianna Dior, who comes to White for the treatment of a yoga injury. White convincingly pulls off her character, who's essentially the Harvey Weinstein of healthcare, and the fine-featured, smoky-eyed Dior is an enticing morsel. Dior might not be as well-endowed as White, but her tits are beautifully shaped, and her ass is why yoga pants were invented. White goes full-bore on her comely patient, smothering Dior with her mambos, then rimming her fervently. Darcie Dolce, Valentina Nappi and April O'Neil wrap things up, forming a triumvirate of towering titflesh as they go at each other in a carnal variation of The Human Centipede. Large Naturals is a work of udder delight. —P.D.R.

AXEL BRAUN'S DIRTY TALK 4

WICKED PICTURES. DIRECTOR: AXEL BRAUN. STARRING: KENZIE TAYLOR, GIA MILANA, HONEY BLOSSOM, APRIL SNOW, RAMON NOMAR, SETH GAMBLE, LOGAN PIERCE & RYAN MCLANE.

Typically the appeal of a porn video hinges on women shoving things into their mouths, but Axel Braun's Dirty Talk 4 chooses to hang its thematic hat on the words coming out of its starlets' yaps. It's too bad that much of the time this offering pays mere lip service to its concept. Pneumatic blonde Kenzie Taylor starts things off with her plump lips, swollen tits and attempt at potty-mouthed patter. Lamentably, Taylor's foul-tongued soliloquy is buried deep in the mix to the point where truly hearing what she has to say requires cranking the volume to ill-advised levels, especially for apartment dwellers. If the dirty talk is so central here, why does Taylor's voice-over sound like it was recorded through a paper cup with a string tied to it? Is it intended to be subliminal? A heavy thumb on the volume control reveals phrases such as, "Start stroking that cock for me before you fuck me" and "Are you gonna give it to me? Are you gonna fuck me and give me all of that cum?" Serviceable profanity, sure, but hardly worth getting yourself branded as the building pervert once the muted monologue gives way to piercing fuck shrieks. As for Taylor's scene, it's standard though whack-worthy fare, pedestrian but not without passion. Overall, Dirty Talk 4 should have definitely mouthed off more. —P.D.R.

PROMISCUOUS

LARRY FLYNT PRODUCTIONS

I'm from the Bay Area, and I'm a huge sports fan. Give it up for the 49ers! I'm into all kinds of exercise, and a while back I took a gym class where I learned the trapeze and aerial silks. Doing routines on silks is supersexy, and it requires so much upper body strength. Besides exercise, I'm into my fur babies—I have several pets right now, but I'd love to have more.

"Even off camera, I've always been a little promiscuous, but to get me into bed, a guy needs to win me over with his personality. I usually prefer men over women in my real life, but I never say never. Once I was at a party, and a model approached me, saying, 'You'd never do this with a girl, would you?' meaning sex. We ended up fucking all night!"

EDITED BY MORGEN "TEX" HAGEN

MOCHA MENAGE

"I'm honored to be featured in HUSTLER," declares Mocha Menage, 30, a skin-mag rookie from Milwaukee, Wisconsin. "It was a goal of mine 'cause I love being naked in front of a camera. Modeling nude makes me feel even more confident, free-spirited and flirty." Despite revealing that she's "single as fuck," the 5-foot-6 Badger Stater digs watching The Real Housewives of Atlanta and The Real Housewives of Potomac, as well as reading, cooking, trap music (a style of hip hop) and "smoking good weed." Getting down to the nitty-gritty, Mocha notes, "I'm straight, and my favorite thing is giving BJs of course, but I also love to fuck women. There's something about how soft our bodies are that drives me crazy." Mocha has another confession: "I masturbate every single day. Most of the time it's short and sweet. Just a simple clit vibrator will get the job done, but sometimes I attach a dildo to the shower wall and bang it out." —Photos by Wolf Whistle Studio

"One of my fantasies is finding the right partner to make anal sex pleasurable for both of us."

AZURE ANGEL

"I'd never modeled before this," recalls Azure Angel, 22, from Székesfehérvár, Hungary. "The photographer had to show me how to pose, but I'm a good learner, and we had fun." Azure, a university student and local flower shop's delivery person, muses, "I hope that your readers have fun looking at naked little me—all 1.57 meters!" (That's 5-foot-2 as Americans measure heights.) Azure will never be a basketball star, but she has athletic hobbies, namely bicycling, canoe sprint and water polo. "I'm a tomboy," Azure admits. "I'm always competitive, hard-nosed and fearless, even during sex. I don't want to be treated like a queen. I like it rough and merciless, so you know I love deep-throating and anal." Azure wraps up with some historical and culinary tidbits about her hometown: "My country's first kings were crowned and buried here. Székes means 'royal' in English, and fehérvár means 'white castle.'" Though Székesfehérvár doesn't have any White Castle stores offering juicy sliders, McDonald's thrives. Azure raves, "I go for either their dupla sajtburgerek [double cheeseburgers] or Brutal Brutus, which would be a good name for my ideal sex partner. It's actually a burger loaded with a salad, onion ring and potato pancake." Sounds yummy, but not as yummy as Azure. —Photos by Omnia Productions

"I love being sandwiched by two guys who bury their cocks in my pussy and ass. In Hungary we call that dupla behatolás."

DANIELLA VALENTI

"I wanted to appear in HUSTLER because Larry Flynt is a freedom-of-speech advocate," says Pompano Beach, Florida, native Daniella Valentini, 32. "So am I." The 5-foot-6 newbie—who resided in Dollar, Scotland, as a teenager—has a diversified working life. She's a yoga trapeze instructor, certified massage therapist and writer. "I'm genuine, playful and professional," Daniella tells us. "My hobbies are yoga, hiking, vegan cooking, gardening and travel. My favorite TV show is Strange Angel, and my favorite book is Amber Dawn's Sub Rosa. It's a fantasy novel about magical sex workers." As for Daniella's musical tastes, they range from Cat Power, Thievery Corporation and Little Dragon to legends like Otis Redding, Billie Holiday and Jimi Hendrix. Daniella, whose most daring sexcapade took place in an airport bathroom, wraps up her revelations with gusto: "I'm a bi switch, meaning I can be either submissive or dominant, and I'm a devotee of tantric sex. I really fancy yab yum [the female lover is seated on the male's lap], cowgirl, doggy and squirting." —Photos by Tony F.

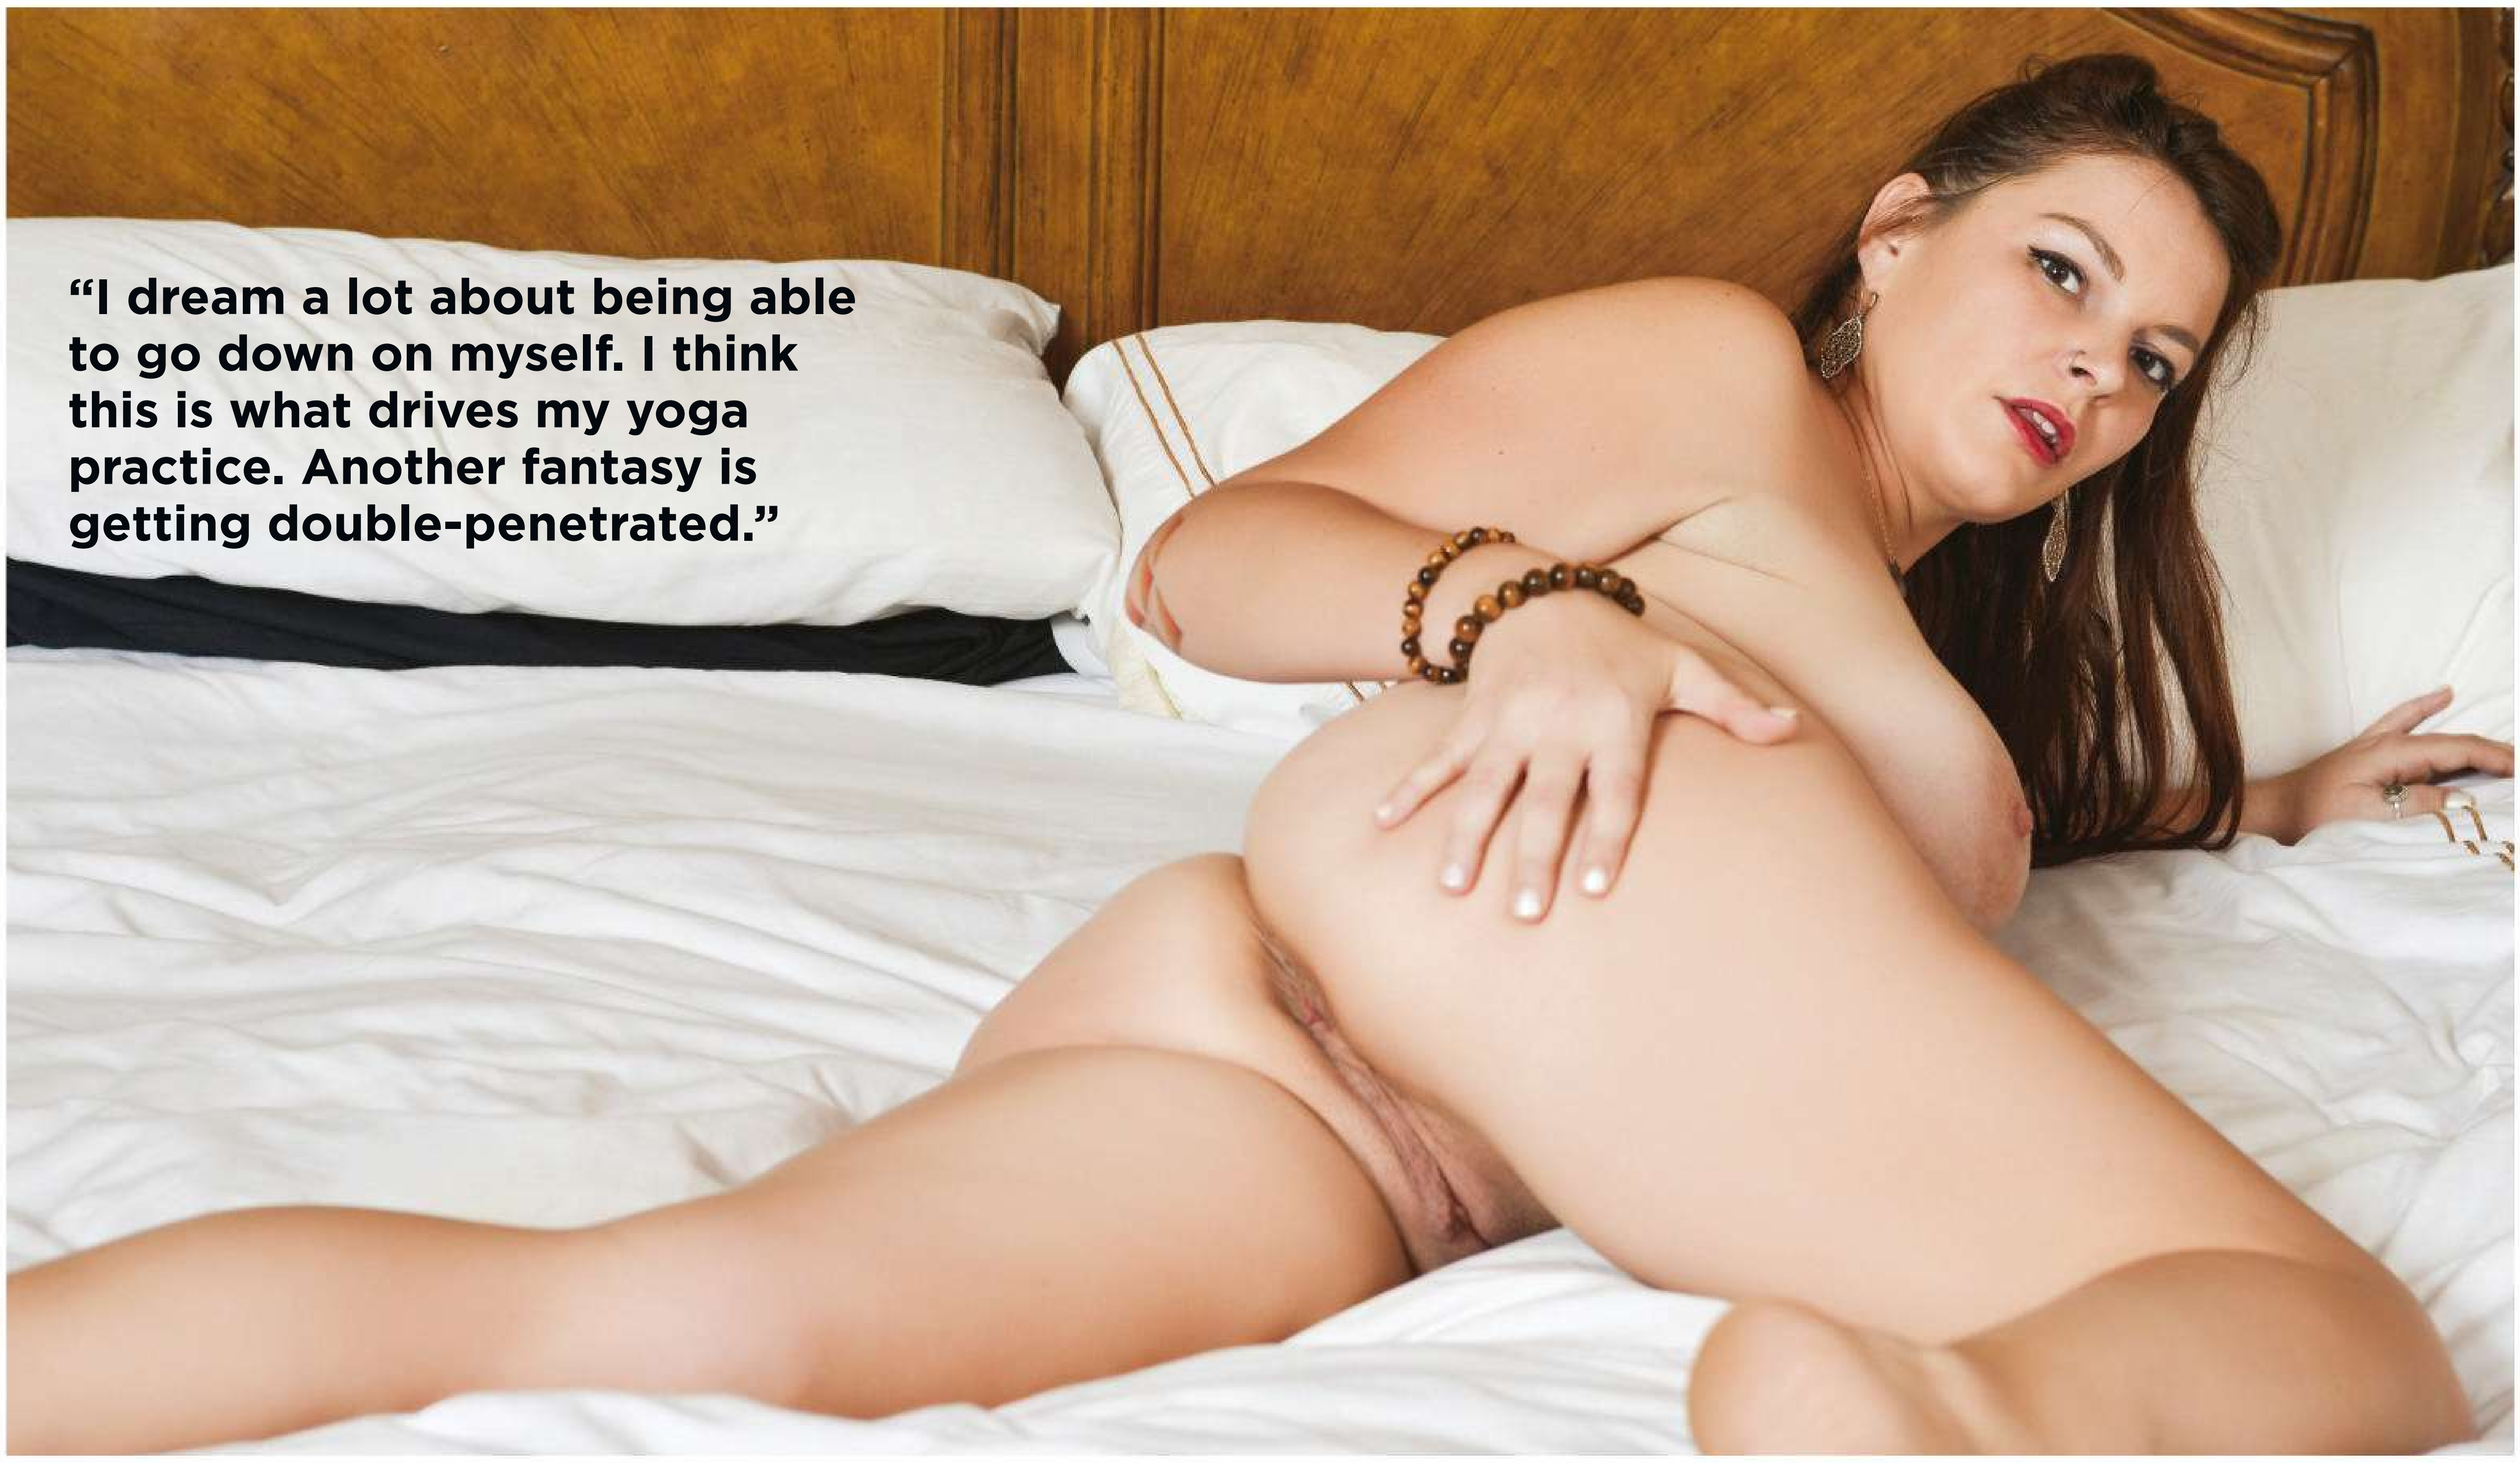
Instagram: @TheDaniellaValenti



"I dream a lot about being able to go down on myself. I think this is what drives my yoga practice. Another fantasy is getting double-penetrated."

ANDER PAGE & LEE STONE

THE ULTIMATE SWORD FIGHT

HUSTLER CLASSIC
FEBRUARY 2004

PHOTOGRAPHY BY MATTI KLATT

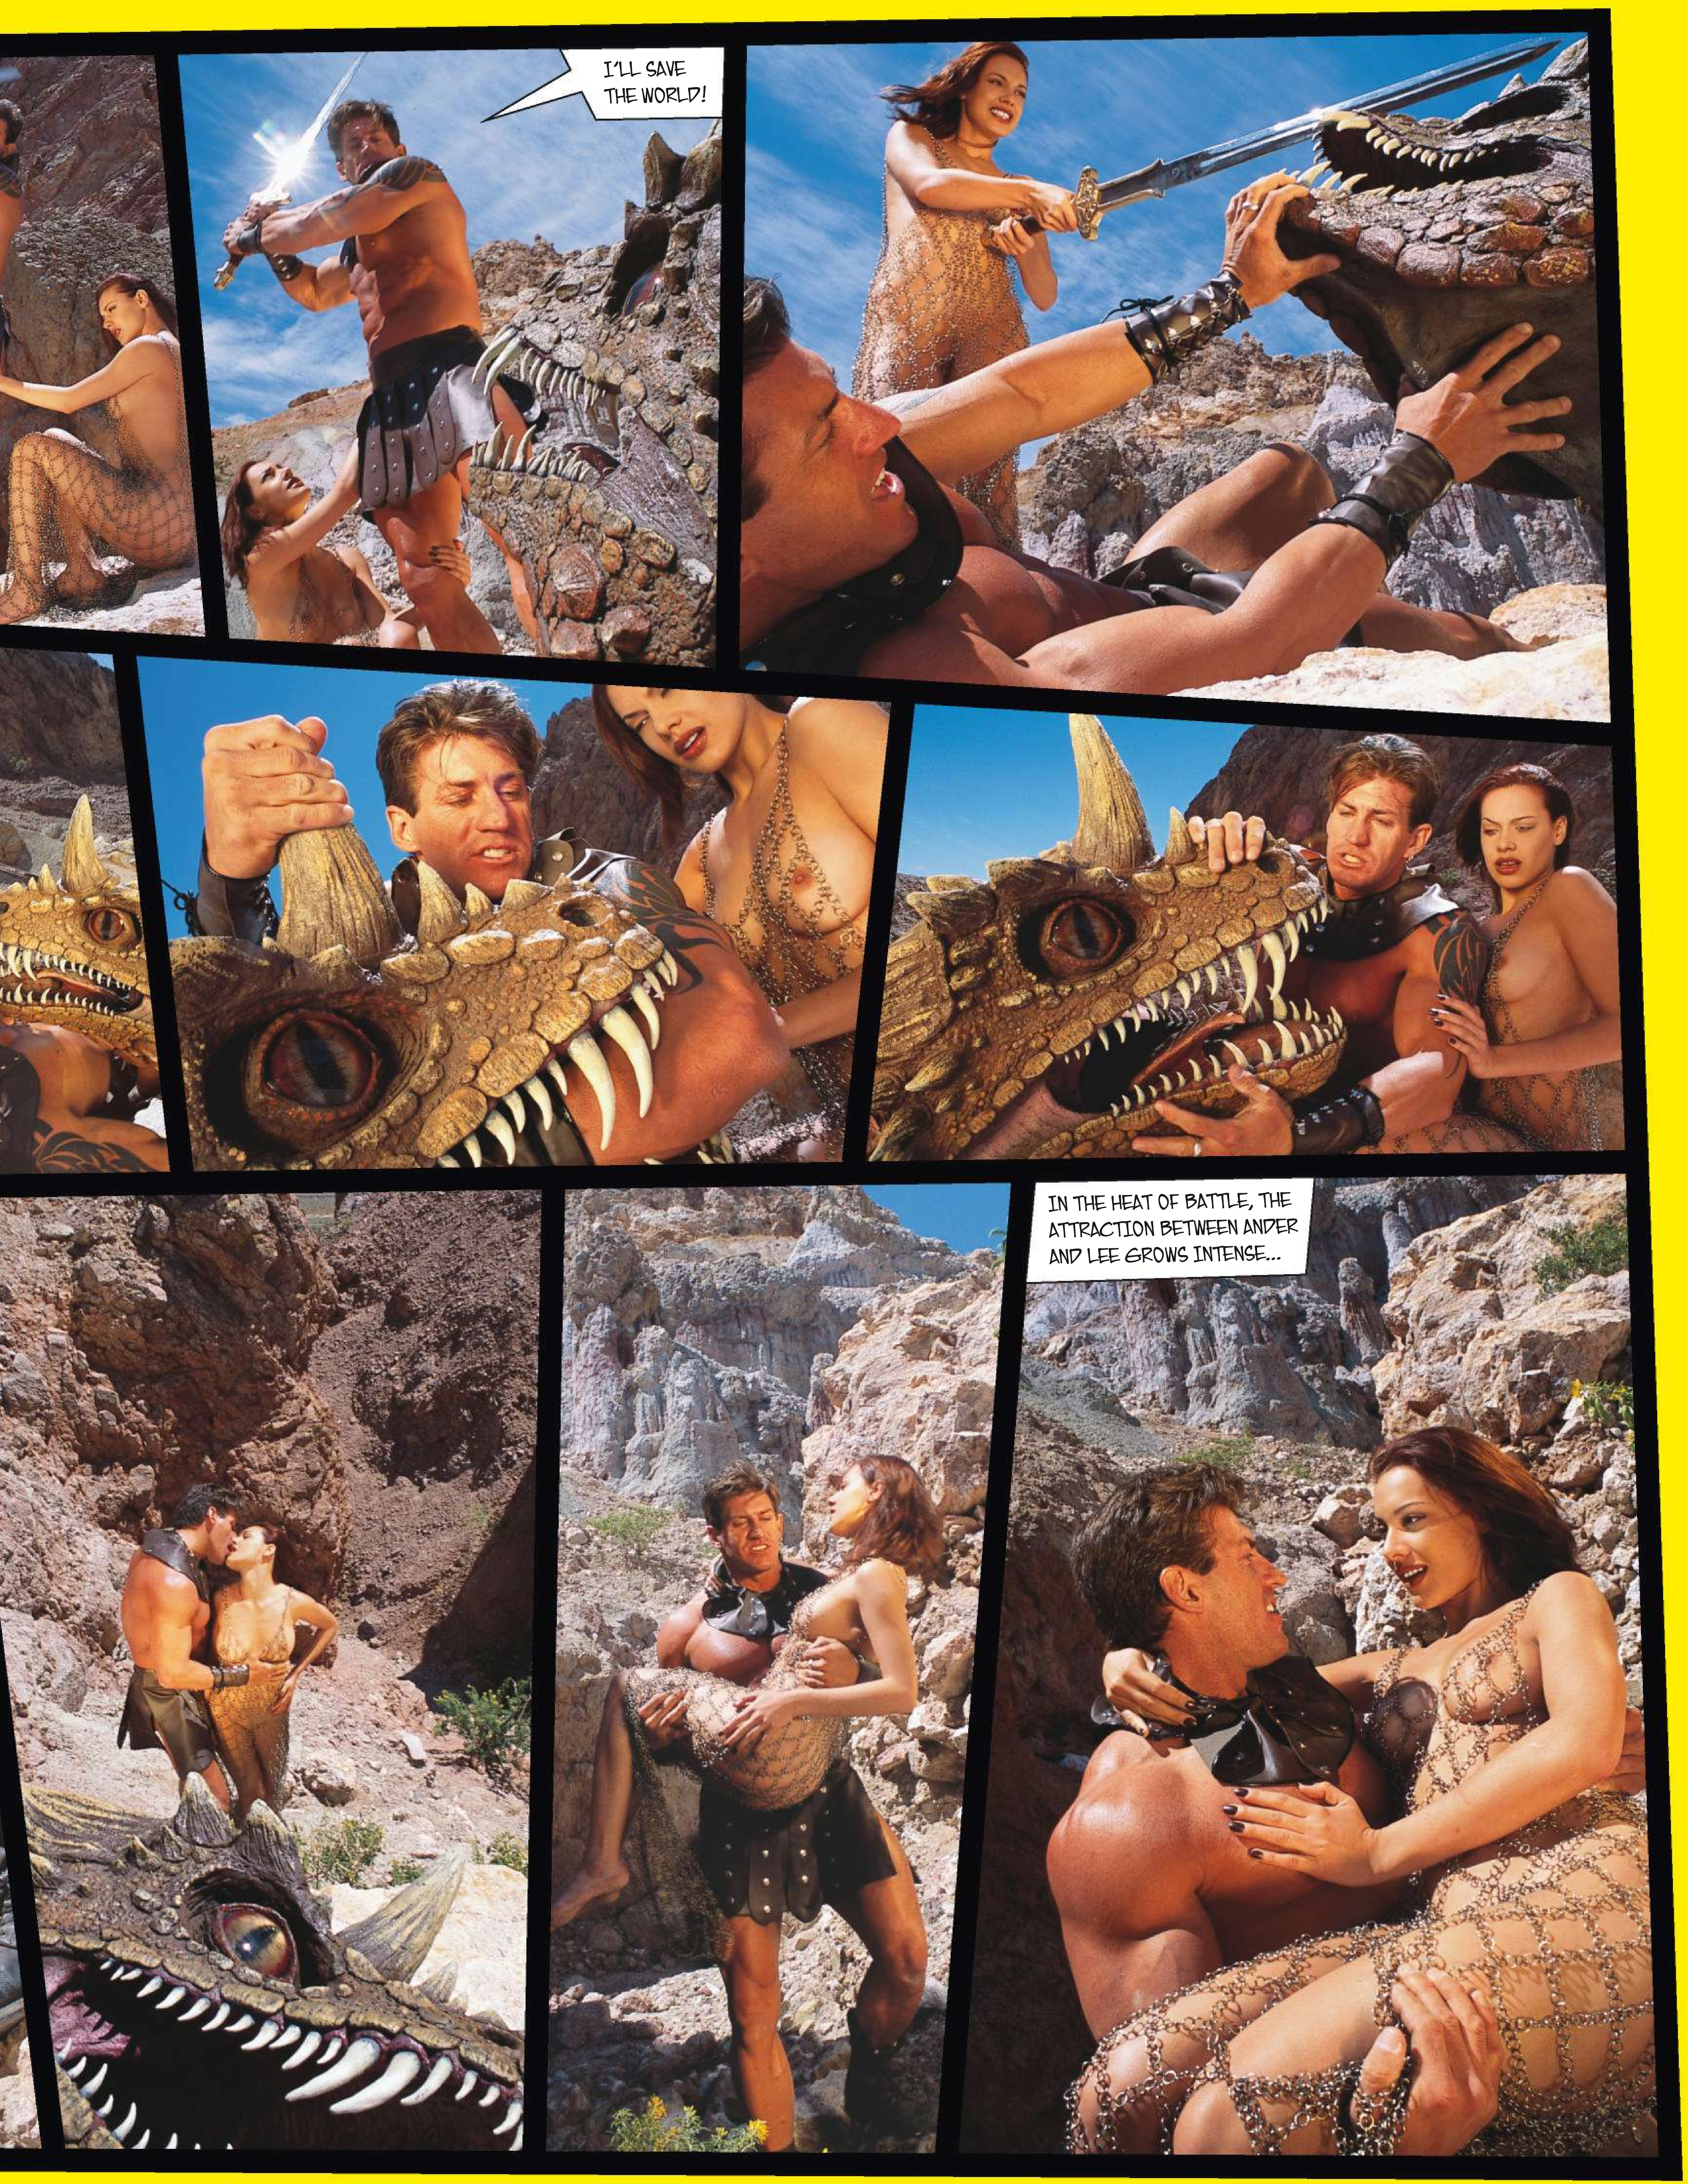
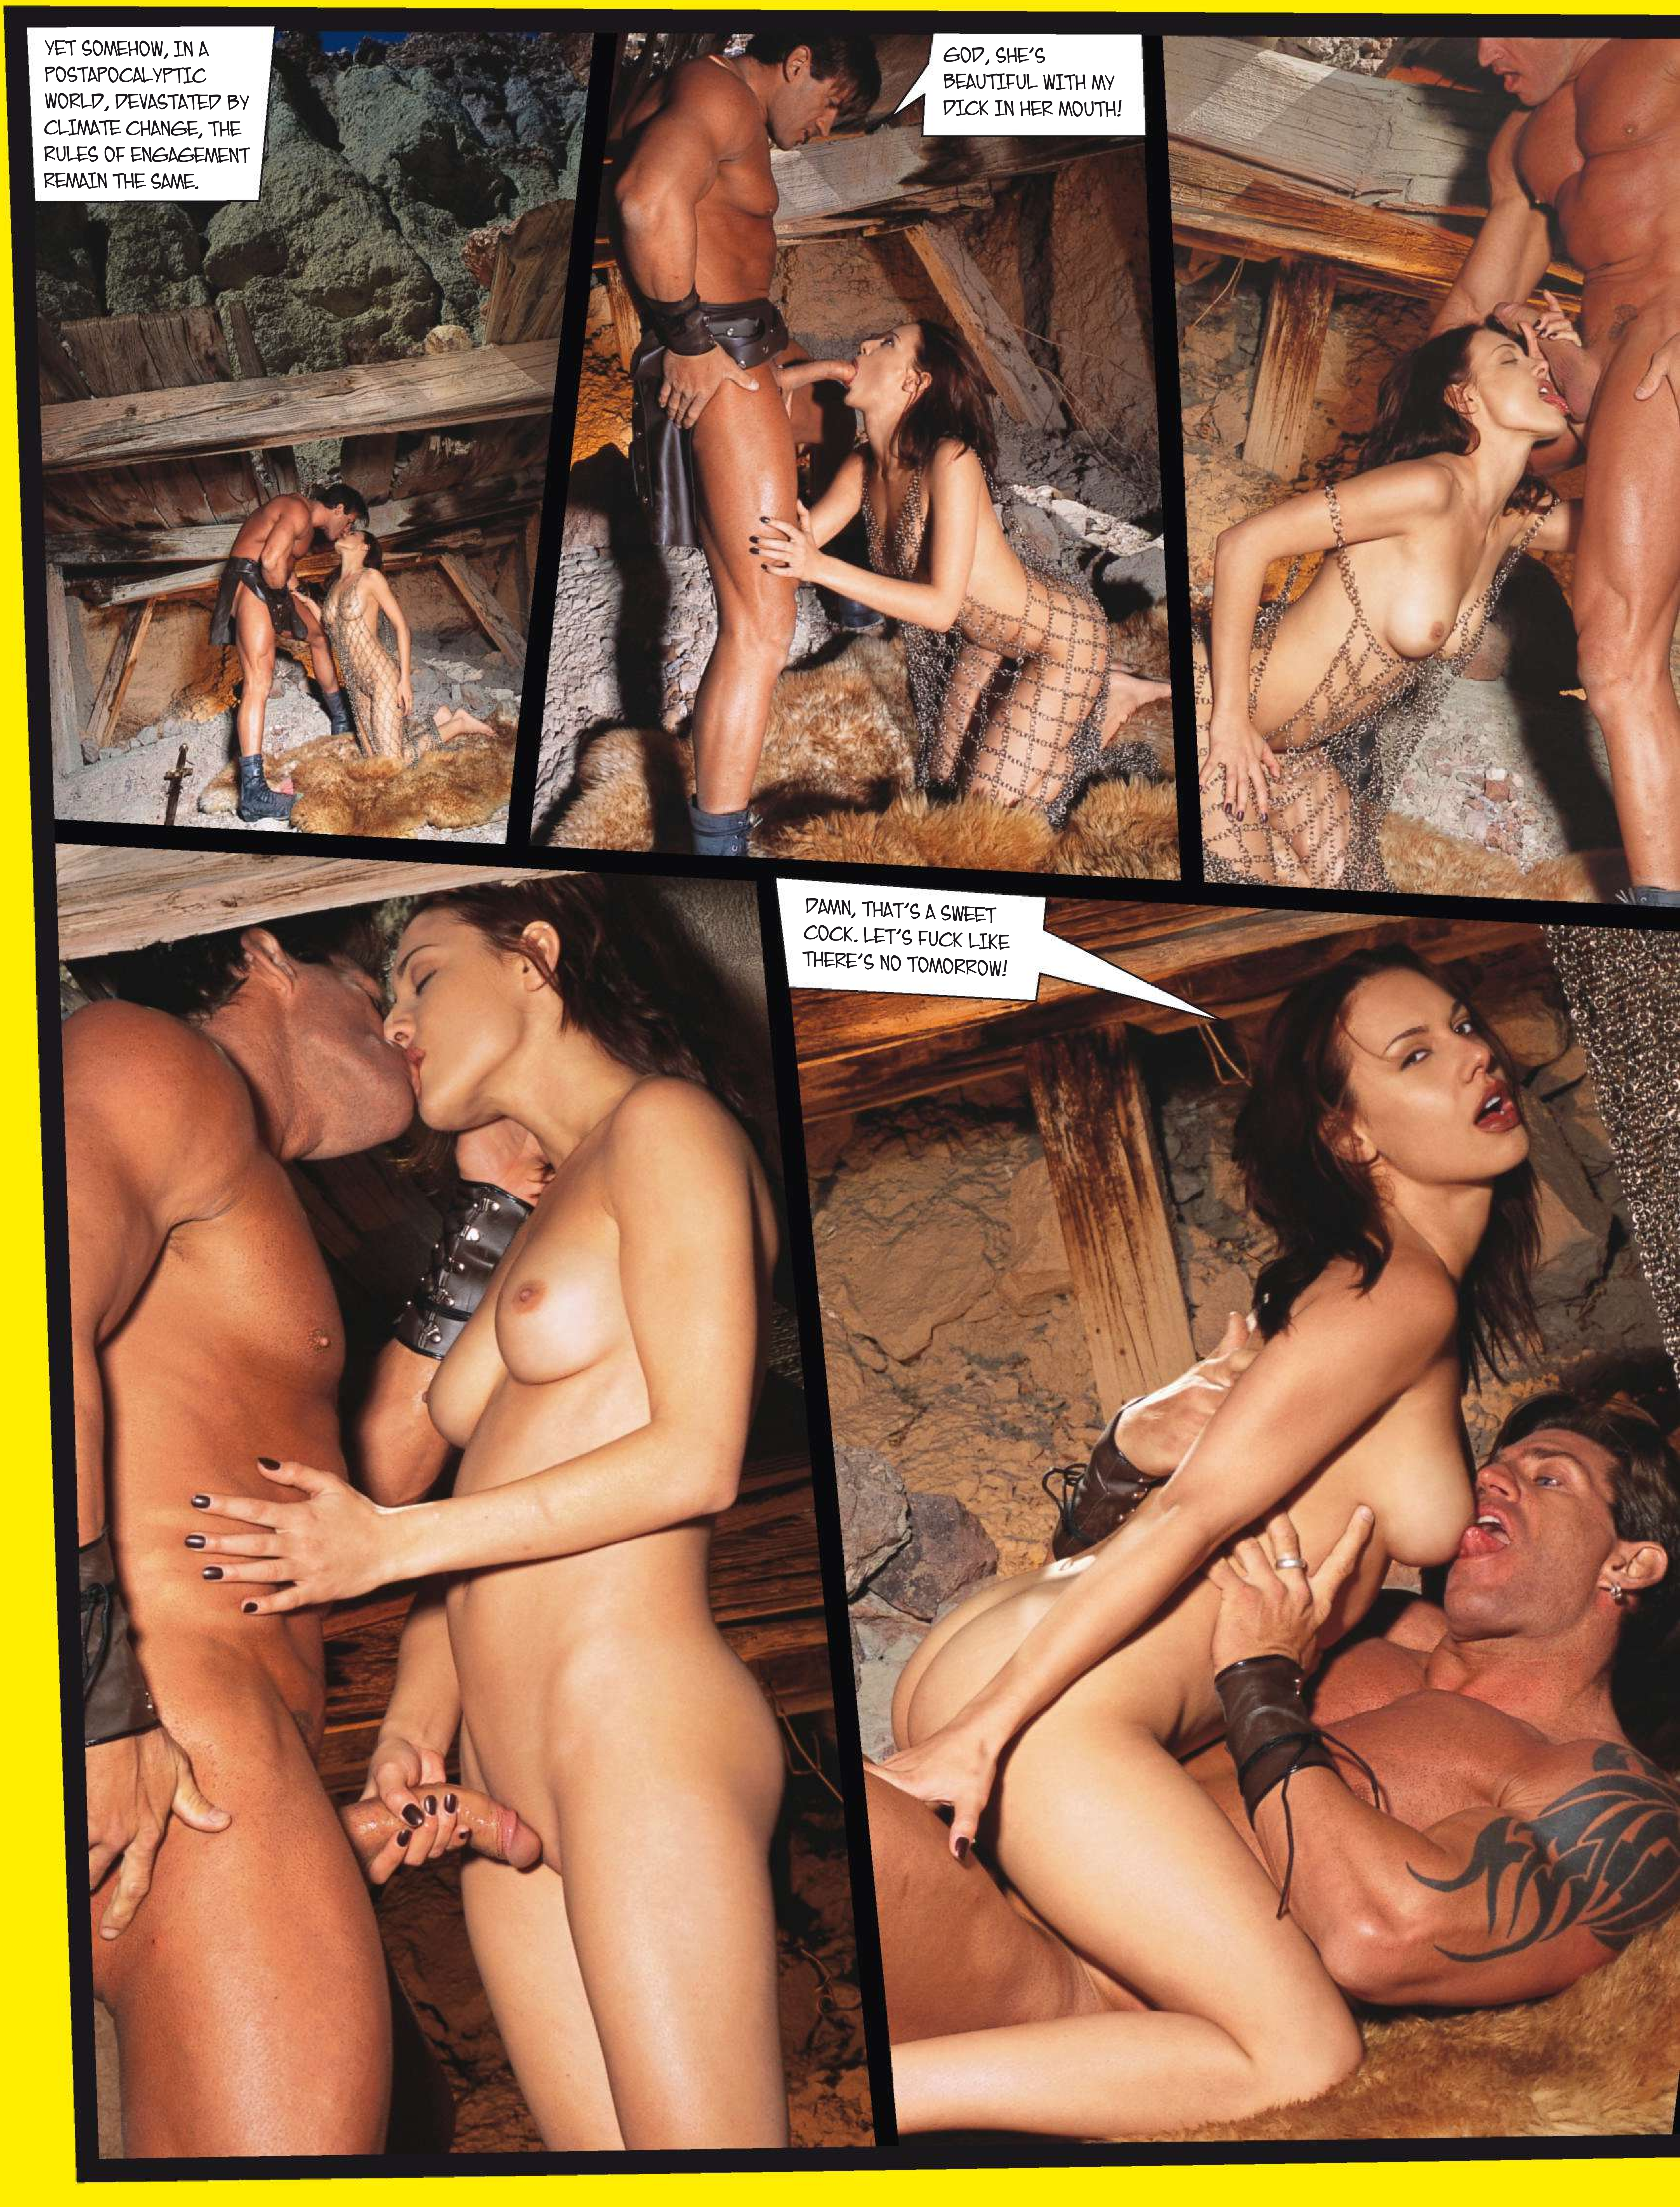
IN THE AGE-OLD BATTLE TO VANQUISH A MONSTER AND WIN THE GIRL ENTERS LEE STONE, GUARDIAN OF THE SWORD, OUR HERO.

WILL THIS MAN OF STEEL CONQUER THE HORRIFIC BEAST? WILL HE RESCUE ANDER PAGE? WILL HE GET LAID?

I'LL SAVE YOU, ANDER!
BUT JUST LIKE THAT, THE TABLES TURN.
AND OUR HERO IS RESCUED BY THE DAMSEL OF THE DAY.



I'LL SAVE THE WORLD!
IN THE HEAT OF BATTLE, THE ATTRACTION BETWEEN ANDER AND LEE GROWS INTENSE...



YET SOMEHOW, IN A POSTAPOCALYPTIC WORLD, DEVASTATED BY CLIMATE CHANGE, THE RULES OF ENGAGEMENT REMAIN THE SAME.
GOD, SHE'S BEAUTIFUL WITH MY DICK IN HER MOUTH!
DAMN, THAT'S A SWEET COCK. LET'S FUCK LIKE THERE'S NO TOMORROW!

NO TIME. NO CLOCKS. NO BULLSHIT OFFICE JOB. NO INTERRUPTIONS. WE CAN FUCK ALL DAY EVERY DAY IF WE LIKE. SURE, THERE'S THE OCCASIONAL HEINOUS MONSTER, BUT NOW I HAVE A SWORD—TWO SWORDS—AND THE SKILLS TO USE THEM.

AND TO THE VICTOR GO THE SPOILS...

LIFE IS GOOD...

BRIAN POSEHN: METAL MANIAC

The stand-up comic/actor is best known for his roles on hit TV shows. But away from acting, his passion is heavy metal. Posehn sits down with Keith Valcourt to tell the story behind his twisted mash-up of comedy and rock, Grandpa Metal. Photos by Victor Lightworship.

PAUL BOOTH: MARKED FOR DEATH

The Master of Macabre invites reporter Colin McCracken into his shadowy lair at Last Rites Gallery and Tattoo. In this exclusive interview, the legendary dark artist lets loose on everything from collecting human remains to becoming the go-to tattooist for rock stars.

ALL-NATURAL BLACK TITTIES

Deliciously dark Ds, DDs and, yes, even bigger! All-Natural Black Titties boasts the incredibly beautiful Jenna Foxx, Kinsley Karter, Tori Montana and Daisy Cooper. It's a boobylicious fuckfest with titty-schtups galore! Photography courtesy HUSTLER Video.
